

Partnership Executive – Take-home assignment

What stays?

- Commercial FAQ – Stays, but needs update
 - Gives partners clear answers to common questions early on.
 - Keeps messaging consistent across teams.
 - Works across different partner types, but needs to stay focused.

Currently out of date and risks confusion. Update with recent questions and tailor to each tier.

- Internal onboarding checklist – Stays, but needs to be expanded
 - Already used consistently and gives teams a clear structure for setup.
 - Helps avoid gaps and keeps teams aligned during the onboarding.
 - Works across all partner types by keeping the basics covered.

Keep it as the backbone, but expand it slightly so partnership managers can use it to track key onboarding steps and ensure a more consistent partner experience.

What goes?

- Welcome email template – Remove
 - A one-size-fits-all approach does not reflect different partner needs.
 - Teams are already rewriting it, creating inconsistency and duplication.
 - Doesn't add value for larger or more complex partners.

It's not being used as intended, driving fragmented communication and leading to an inconsistent partner experience. Removing the current template and replacing it with a small set of tailored templates suited to each partner archetype will mean managers can send something relevant without starting from scratch.

- Onboarding deck (24 slides) – Remove and Replace
 - Used inconsistently and often rewritten, creating duplication across regions.
 - Too long and generic to land effectively with partners.
 - Does not reflect different partner needs, so teams adapt to it or avoid using it.

There is too much in one format, resulting in low adoption. Replace with modular materials tailored by partner type, with a consistent core.

What would I build first?

- Tier-based onboarding templates
 - Create three onboarding paths aligned to partner type (Tier 1, Tier 2, Tier 3).
 - Each includes: an introductory email, a call structure, an integration checklist, and launch criteria.
 - Keep a consistent core structure, with flexibility based on partner needs.
 - Reduces inconsistency across regions and avoids teams rewriting materials.
 - Ensures onboarding is relevant, from large payment networks to independent operators.

Start by reviewing current onboarding journeys, then define a core structure and build templates for each tier.
